UM ALUMNUS IS
TEACHER OF YEAR
IN WASHINGTON STATE

MISSOULA--

A University of Montana alumnus recently was named 1969 Teacher of the Year in the State of Washington.

Anthony J. Antonucci, a 1961 UM graduate in education, health and physical education, recently was named to the honor in Spokane, Wash., where he teaches school, by the Association of Classroom Teachers of the Washington Education Association. He attended UM on a football scholarship.

As recipient of the state honor in Washington, Antonucci is automatically entered in the National Teacher of the Year competition sponsored by LOOK magazine and the Council of Chief State School Officers.

The Brooklyn, N.Y., native taught nine years in Montana, including four on the Flathead Indian Reservation at St. Ignatius, Mont., where he instructed classes at the junior high school level in language arts and speech, and coached basketball.

For two years he taught junior and senior high school at Thompson Falls, Mont., where he also served as drama director.

Antonucci has taught the past three years at the Continuation High School in Spokane, where he introduced the school's first drama program.
